Claim 2 are allowed, because prior art taken alone or in combination fails to suggest a image processing method that includes specifying, based upon an angle of rotation and amount of positional deviation a rotation resistant reference point at which an error of position of a comparative object becomes a minimum value, error being detected by pattern matching between an image of comparative object which is obtained by imaging comparative object disposed in an attitude that includes a positional deviation in a direction of rotation and reference image, in combinations with the other elements of the claims.

Claim 3 are allowed, because prior art taken alone or in combination fails to suggest a image processing method that includes specifying a center of rotation or a point in a region near center of rotation as a rotation resistant reference point center of rotation being with in a specified range from a maximum value of amount of coincidence among plurality of different centers of rotation said rotation resistant reference point being at which an error of position of a comparative object becomes a minimum value, error being detected by pattern matching between an image of comparative object which is obtained by imaging comparative object disposed in an attitude that includes a positional deviation in a direction of rotation and reference image, in combinations with the other elements of the claims.
